

Teaching English

Posted by Peter on 17 August 2009

The British Council/BBC website Teaching English is probably the most important English language teaching site on the web. It brings together everything busy teachers need for the classroom and the staffroom - lesson plans and worksheets, teaching tips, web links, teaching articles and lots of information about professional development - training, conferences and qualifications. Teachers can customise their own area on the site to provide personalised content. The site contains interactive and multimedia material including teaching videos, blogs and podcasts, and discussion forums. It also features regular guest contributors - teachers from around the world and ELT specialists from the UK.

Teaching English has agreed that a small number of other English language websites, including Listen to English, can use some of its material. I hope you find it useful!

This is the text of the podcast at <http://www.listen-to-english.com/index.php?id=474>,